Indhold på kurset:

This EMDR Europe Accredited level II Child & Adolescent Training aims to extend and deepen the knowledge of how to use EMDR with children and adolescents with complex traumatization and developmental trauma disorders. It is open to therapists who have completed an EMDR Europe Accredited Level I Child & Adolescent training as well as having completed EMDR Level II general training.

The training will briefly review the changing needs of children at different developmental stages, from 2 - 16 years of age, and how the basic EMDR protocol may be adapted to address these needs. Children suffering multiple complex traumatization have a much greater need for the integration of trauma work with other aspects and treatment of the child's world. Issues affecting affect regulation, the family system, social relationships, educational functioning and attachment will be discussed in relation to children and adolescents with complex needs. For children with complex traumatization there is a fundamental need to establish stabilisation and containment and the timing of EMDR processing in the overall treatment plan will be explored. Developing an insight into the window of tolerance for such fragile clients is discussed. The neurobiological aspects of affect regulation and increasing affect tolerance during treatment will all be explored together with developing attunement and fractionating targets. Resource development techniques and resilience will also be explored, together with how and when to use cognitive, educational and other interweaves with these children. How to work with dissociative children and adolescents using EMDR will also be examined. By means of video demonstration and case examples, participants will learn how to apply EMDR with children and adolescents with complex and multiple traumatization as a result of severe and complex traumatic events including multiple different traumas, domestic violence, physical and sexual abuse, attachment disorders and dissociative disorders. Participants are encouraged to bring with them any relevant case material they might wish to discuss, since ample time will be allowed for both troubleshooting and for case consultation of existing or potential clients.
